

I am a paid subscriber to XM radio and it concerns me that the FCC is considering limits on XM's abilities to program their service to suit their listeners needs and desires. I subscribe to XM for many reasons, but the biggest reason is for the freedom of choice it offers. I do not think the FCC should be trying to interfere with XM and it's customers rights to get any programming they desire. The ability to get traffic reports, and local information from XM is huge benefit to the public safety.

It will be in the public's intrest for the FCC to leave satelite radio free from regulation.
